Update
(August 2011)

Our Sunday afternoon “drop in” Art Class for children living in the local area is still popular despite the rainy season. They enjoy singing songs, listening to stories and using different materials during creative time. *Jackie, JWOC Education Manager, and Somath, JWOC Librarian, telling a story called The Puddle Pail. Your continued support of the Free Classes Project has made it possible to run a variety of activities within our classes. These photos highlight the diversity within our Project. Click below to find out more: <http://www.journeyswithourcommunity.org/projects/education/>

English Conversation Class is another of our free “drop in” classes but this time focuses on adults who want to develop their English speaking skills. Recently they have really enjoyed having lots of opportunities to practice speaking with some of JWOC’s guests and volunteers. The picture above shows students grouped with volunteers working on a speaking activity.

Our library has been open for almost six months and donations of funds and resources have meant that our library is becoming more interesting for different aged students. Children enjoy playing and reading in their free activities time. (Above)

As part of our sewing course the students learn English, focusing on sewing and tailoring language. This is very important as Siem Reap is full of tourists and opportunities for work may arise in this industry in the future. *Our 7th sewing course students playing Run and Write, a team game, to review vocabulary. Rahm has been volunteering on Saturday and Sundays as an English Teacher for nearly two months. Rahm, who works full time as a tour coordinator says, “I would like to share my English knowledge to poor Cambodia students, especially children as much as I can. I really enjoy my teaching as I notice my students study hard and improve a lot.” (Above)

With seven classes a week and open hours for those who need additional practice, the computer lab is proving to be very popular. The first computer course will complete in mid-August and a new course will start shortly after. Each course lasts eight months and includes Khmer and English Typing, Word, Excel, PowerPoint, Internet and Email. *Students in a PowerPoint class can be seen practicing making presentation slides. In our English classes teachers help students to develop a range of skills to practice essential grammar rules and vocabulary. Students are grouped by Tivechka, a scholarship teacher, enabling them to practice speaking in her class warm-up session. (Above)
